

Title: Would you take financial advice from someone on social media?

Not really, unless I know that they're, someone you can trust outside of that.
But I wouldn't take it just automatically from social media without checking them out first.

Not really. No, no, no, I wouldn't have any faith in that now. There's just so many fake things that I wouldn't be able to discern it, so I wouldn't do it.

Absolutely not. No way. I wouldn't entertain it. I'm too old.

I don't think I would. I think I'd rather go in person. Or maybe on a zoom session. I probably would, something like that.
But not just, you know, not just on Facebook or Instagram.

Under no circumstances.

No, I think a lot of it is fake anyways, so it's not really worth it.

No. Because it's an unknown person.

No, no, because I don't really be on social media. But if I was, no. No.

It'd have to be somewhere I'd know, like, or you know, trust or, you know.

Just, I have an accountant for that. Simple as.

I don't think so, I think because social media is really unrealistic, sometimes.
And I think, you should just go from the advice from the people around you, people that know you

I dunno, just like, sure, my parents know, well, not that they know it all, but like, I'm just like, I get my advice from them and I trust them. So that's it really for me.

No.

No, absolutely.

How come?

Because I don't I can't identify who it is or if someone on social media is selling a product.
So, you know, I would just, no.

Find out more centralbank.ie/wordonthestreet